Thousand Islands Getaways

PUTRI ISLAND

The resort island offers a weekend package leaving from the Ancol marina every Saturday at 08:00 and arriving back on Sunday at 16:00. The package includes a return transfer to the resort - it takes about 90 minutes on a speedboat - and a fullboard accommodation at one of the modern cottages. The resort has a dive center to arrange a diving/ snorkeling trip around the region.

TIGER ISLAND

Surrounded by white sand beaches, this eco resort is famous among the expatriates living in Jakarta as a tropical island getaway. Easily accessible from the Ancol Marina, there is a weekend package that includes a return transfer to the resort, a fullboard accommodation, and watersport facilities. Scuba diving can also be arranged by the resort with a prior notice.

GENTENG KECIL ISLAND

For a private family gathering or just a weekend getaway, this resort island offers an accommodation on a private white sand beach, which is particularly unique to this island among the thousands in Indonesia.

PULAU AYER

This island resort boasts its cottages combining modern and Papuan designs. For a more tropical experience, choose the floating cottages, where guests can jump into the water from the comfort of their rooms.

KOTOK ISLAND

Offering a getaway, guests flock in every weekend for snorkeling and scuba diving. It has a resort, but since the facilities are very basic, it is recommended to visit this island for a day trip with a booked lunch from the resort.

DINING

Culinary Specialities

Jakarta's cuisine is known for being diverse and eclectic, drawing culinary influences from various regions across the world. The city's street food culture plays a prominent role in Jakarta's cuisine. Mobile carts and street food centres can be found across Jakarta, selling a wide variety of local dishes.

NASI UDUK

This popular Indonesian dish literally translates to "mixed rice" and is prepared using steamed rice that is cooked in coconut milk instead of water. Though the dish is originally from Jakarta, it can now be found widely across the country.

MIE KANGKUNG

Mie Kangkung is a noodle soup dish that is served with kangkung as well as mushrooms, egg and special Indonesian meatballs – also known as bakso. The highlight of the dish is the kangkung, a popular leafy green that is commonly used in Asian cuisine.

Culinary Specialities

LONTONG SAYUR

Popular amongst Indonesia's Betawi people, this dish comprises pressed rice cake served with tofu, hard-boiled egg, vegetables and a thick coconut milk soup. Lontong Sayur is considered to be a favourite on breakfast menus along with other dishes such as Bubur Aam.

BIR PLETOK

Bir Pletok beverages are made from a mixture of several spices, namely ginger, leaves fragrant pandan and lemongrass. This traditional drink is known among ethnic Betawi. To make the color more attractive, the Betawi people usually use an extra wood cup which gives a red color when brewed with hot water. Although it contains the word beer, beer pletok does not contain alcohol. This nutritious drink facilitates blood circulation. Betawi people eat a lot at night as warmers.

ASINAN BETAWI

Asinan Betawi is made from preserved Chinese cabbage, cabbage, bean sprouts, tofu, and lettuce served in a thin, hot, peanut sauce with vinegar, topped with peanuts and krupuk (especially krupuk mie).

KETOPRAK

The main ingredients in Ketoprak include vegetables, sliced fried tofu, steamed rice cake and rice vermicelli slathered with a rich layer of peanut sauce. This vegetarian dish is a typical street-food that has now gained popularity throughout Java.

KERAK TELOR

Kerak telor is a Betawi traditional spicy omelette dish in Indonesian cuisine. It is made from glutinous ricecooked with egg and served with serundeng (fried shredded coconut), fried shallots and dried shrimp as topping. It is considered as a snack and not as a main dish. The vendors of kerak telor are easily the most ubiquitous during the annual Jakarta Fair and it has also become a must-have menu item for visitors at the event.

ROTI BUAYA

Directly translating to "crocodile bread", Roti Buaya is a popular sweet bread in Jakarta that is named after its crocodile shape. The origins of Roti Buaya can be traced back to the Portuguese and Dutch who first settled in Jakarta, introducing bread and pastry-making.

Culinary Specialities

Bogor and Puncak are both renowned for their exquisite culinary delicacies and are exciting destinations for food-lovers to visit. Popular signature dishes range from savoury dishes to sweet desserts to other snacks and street food favourites.

Culinary specialities in Bogor and Puncak include:

ASINAN BOGOR

Served by both restaurants and street vendors, Asinan Bogor is a fruit pickle dish that is unique to Bogor. The dish is prepared using the fruit asinan of Bogor city as well as other preserved tropical fruits in a sweet and sour chilli sauce, sprinkled with peanuts.

DOCLANG

Doclang Bogor is a traditional rice cake dish that has become a highly popular breakfast. This dish is a mix of Indonesian rice cakes – known as lontong – together with steamed potatoes, fried tofu and boiled egg. The dish is usually topped by peanut sauce and various spices that give it its distinct flavour.

BEBEK DUBES

This duck dish serves grilled or fried duck with steamed rice and various vegetables such as cucumbers and tomatoes for garnishing. The dish can also be prepared with honey – which is optional, based on preference.

TOGE GORENG

Toge Goreng is a popular bean sprout dish that comprises a delicious mix of egg noodles, rice cake pieces, slices of fried tofu, red chilli and bean sprouts. The bean sprouts are the highlight of the dish and though the dish name translates to fried bean sprout, the sprouts used in the dish are not fried, but boiled.

SOTO MIE

Soto mie is a spicy noodle – beef soup dish with springroll topping. Commonly found in Indonesia, Malaysia, and Singapore. In Indonesia it is called soto mie and considered as one variant of soto.

KUE APE

Kue Ape or Serabi Jakarta is a popular traditional pancake with a soft and fluffy centre surrounded with thin and crispy crepes, commonly found as a popular street food in Indonesia. It is also popularly known as Kue Cucur Tipis, which is different from the common thicker Kue Cucur. Kue Ape is very similar to Serabi Solo.

DINING

Culinary Specialities

LAKSA BOGOR

Laksa Bogor is a variation of the ever-popular Laksa dish that originated from Bogor. This spicy noodle dish brings together rice vermicelli, bean sprouts and oncom - a staple of West Javan cuisine.

KUE CUBIT

Kue cubit is a common snack food in many Indonesian cities. It is a cake, around 4 centimetres in diameter. It can be obtained from street sellers near schools. Kue cubit uses flour, baking powder, sugar and milk as its primary ingredients.

LAPIS TALAS CAKE

A specialty bread cake of Bogor, Lapis Talas Cake is easily identified by its usual bright magenta colour. The sweet cake made from talas flour and special lapis seasoning, is topped by grated cheese and makes an excellent snack.

BANDREK SUSU

Bandrek susu is a warm beverage made of spices like ginger mixed with condensed milk. It is usually served hot and that's why it is so comforting.

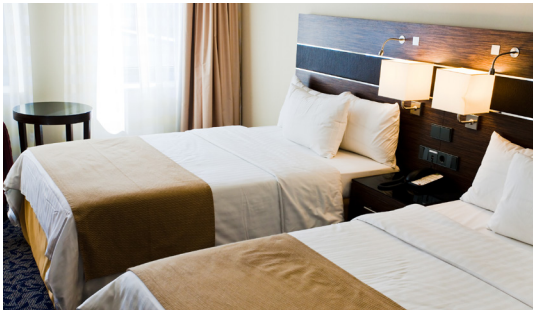

ROTI UNYIL

These are tiny Indonesian sweet buns that are a must-have when travelling in Bogor. Each miniature bun comes with a variety of fillings and can range from sweet to savoury. Popular fillings include chocolate, banana, chicken, sweet corn and peanut butter.

DINING

Culinary Specialities

Bandung is the perfect destination to sample the authentic Sundanese cuisine of West Java. Vegetables form an important part of cuisine in Bandung and it is interesting to note that raw vegetables – also referred to as lalap or lalapan – are used in most dishes.

Culinary specialities in Bandung include:

NASI TIMBEL

The traditional Nasi Timbel dish of Sundanese cuisine is prepared by wrapping hot steamed rice inside a banana leaf to give it a unique flavour and aroma. The rice is served with other side dishes such as chicken, beef and other accompaniments.

CIMOL

These small bite-sized snacks are balls of fried tapioca flour dough that are very soft and best eaten when warm. Cimol can also be served with peanut sauce, powdered seasoning such as chilli powder or cheese – based on preference.

LUMPIA BASAH

Lumpia basah translates to 'wet spring roll' and is a healthier version of the typical spring roll popular in many parts of Southeast Asia. Normally eaten as a snack, this unfried spring roll is stuffed generously with fresh ingredients such as minced prawn or chicken, bamboo shoots and vegetables and dipped in a sweet chili sauce.

SEBLAK

Seblak originated from Bandung and is a famous local specialty in West Java. Seblak has a chewy texture with a spicy aftertaste. It is made from fish or prawn crackers that are boiled and then seasoned with onions, salt, garlic and hot peppers. Many variations exist depending on the seasoning added.

KUE BANDUNG

Kue are extremely popular sweet snacks in Indonesia that are typically consumed as dessert food. Kue Bandung are regional to Bandung and are a type of sweet coconut cake.

MIE KOCOK

Kocok translates to “shake” in Bahasa Indonesian - referring to the method used to prepare the noodle component of this dish. The noodles are served with beef soup, bean sprouts, bakso (a special type of meatball) and other shredded vegetables.

CILOK

Cilok is a snack made with a blend of all purpose flour and tapioca flour, ground toasted dried shrimp, thinly sliced scallions, grated garlic, and seasoned with salt, sugar, and ground white pepper and covered with peanut sauce.

BATAGOR BAKSO TAHU GORENG

The popularity of Batagor Bakso Tahu Goreng makes the dish a must-try when travelling in Bandung. The simple but delicious dish comprises blended fish and bean curd – topped with a layer of special peanut sauce.

DINING

Culinary Specialities

East Javanese food is known to reflect a variety of cuisines, including Arabic, Indian as well as Madurese cuisine – the food of the Madurese ethnic group of Indonesia. A notable feature in the cuisine of the region is the omission of sugar in many of its dishes.

Culinary specialities in Surabaya include:

KETAN SUSU

Ketan Susu, or 'Tansu', is a popular dessert made from sticky rice with warm sweetened condensed milk poured over it. It is often accompanied by a topping such as banana or durian or a combination of both. There are sweet and savoury Ketan Susu variations that will leave you spoilt for choice.

TAHU GUNTING

Tahu Gunting comprises deep fried tofu topped by cassava chips, optional slices of chilli and a rich sauce made from rice flour and peanuts. It is a popular snack in East Java, particularly in Surabaya

LONTONG KUPANG

Lontong consists of compressed rice cake that is wrapped inside a banana leaf in the shape of a cylinder. Lontong Kupang is additionally served with small cockles, topped by the ever-popular petis sauce – made from shrimp paste.

RUJAK CINGUR

Cingur translates to "mouth" in Bahasa Indonesian and Rujak Cingur is a popular dish in Surabaya that comprises the marinated slices of a cow's snout, served with rice cake, raw mango, pineapple, cucumber, peanuts and a black sauce made from fermented shrimp paste.

Rawon

RAWON

Rawon is a traditional Indonesian beef black soup that originated from Surabaya. It is served with bean sprouts, sambal and black nuts – which gives the dish its distinct dark colour and strong nutty flavour.

ALMOND COOKIES

Indonesia's crispy almond cookies are made from simple ingredients and are a very popular snack amongst locals. Easily found at shops and cafes across East Java, these cookies are a must-try when travelling in the region.

Culinary Specialities

Considered to be amongst the world's most complex cuisines, Balinese cuisine showcases its indigenous history and culinary traditions with a vast array of spices, fresh vegetables, meats and seafood. Be sure to try its numerous night markets, food stands and street vendors!

Culinary specialities in Bali include:

SATE LILIT

Balinese sate comes in many forms and Sate Lilit can be prepared using minced chicken, beef or even fish. A distinctive feature of Sate Lilit is its bamboo skewer which is flat and wide to let the meat stick and settle with ease.

BALINESE COFFEE

Coffee is loved in Bali and Balinese coffee, or Kopi Bali, is generally processed differently to coffee preparation methods of other regions of Indonesia. Coffee was first introduced to Bali by Lombok traders in the 20th century and has since remained a prominent element of Balinese life.

NASI CAMPUR BALI

Also known as Nasi Bali, Nasi Campur Bali is the Balinese version of Nasi Campur – a mixed rice dish that is accompanied by small portions of various side dishes. Nasi Bali can be served with grilled tuna, fried tofu and other vegetables and curries, usually wrapped in a banana leaf.

BEBEK BETUTU

Bebek Betutu has earned itself the title as the must-try dish during a visit to Bali. The dish comprises a stuffed duck that is wrapped in banana leaves and coconut husks. It is slow roasted over a pit of embers to give it its unique flavour and taste.

BUBUR INJUN

This black rice pudding is a popular Indonesian sweet dessert that is made from black sticky rice, coconut milk and sugar. Though Bubur Injun is a popular dessert, it is also a much-loved choice for breakfast and can be enjoyed as a snack during any time of the day.

DINING

Culinary Specialities

Lombok's cuisine comes in various flavours, textures and tastes, with a promise to have something in store for everyone. Like most other regions in the country, many dishes are very localised and are prepared with ingredients and spices that are native to the island.

Culinary specialities in Lombok include:

AYAM TALIWANG

This sweet and spicy chicken dish is perhaps Lombok's most popular culinary speciality. Grilled or fried chicken is seasoned with a myriad of flavours during preparation and then served with plecing, eggplant or chilli sauce.

PLECING

Another popular Lombok dish, Plecing comprises spicy water spinach – commonly referred to as kangkung – together with a sambal of tomatoes, chilli pepper, shallots and burned shrimp paste. Plecing is a fresh dish that is usually served cold.

ARES

This is a feisty curry dish that is prepared using the inner stem of a banana, cooked with spicy seasoning and thick coconut milk. It is usually served with rice and is readily available on menus along with other popular Lombok dishes.

BEBALUNG

Prepared using cow or goat ribs, Bebalung is a hearty rib soup that is usually served with rice and chilli sambal. The distinctive feature of the dish is the soft and tender meat that is cooked to produce a delicious sweet and salty flavour.

SATE IKAN TANJUNG

Sate Ikan Tanjung originates from North Lombok and is one of the many variations of Indonesia's sate. The main component of Sate Ikan Tanjung is fresh fish – usually tuna or snapper – which is grilled over charcoal after marinating it in coconut milk, garlic and local spices.

PRAYING FACILITIES

Where To Pray

SELONG GREAT MOSQUE

Considered to be the main mosque of Lombok Island, Selong Great Mosque is a majestic mosque with striking architecture. The mosque is one of the most photographed mosques in the country and is said to appear the most impressive during the daytime – under the blazing sun.

Address: Selong Town, East Lombok, Indonesia.

BAYAN BELEQ MOSQUE

Masjid Bayan Beleq was built during the 16th century by an Islam missionary in Bayan and is the oldest mosque in Lombok. The mosque is also a popular tourist attraction on the island and is characterised by simple yet elegant bamboo weaved walls and a stone foundation.

Address: Bayan, Lombok Utara, Bayan, Lombok 83354, Indonesia.
